Welcome to Wagoorjup – Place of the Rainbow Serpent

A long time ago, before there were bridges and roads, the location of the Canning Bridge was called Wagoorjup by Noongar people. It is the place of the Waagyl – the great Rainbow Serpent.

When you stand by the river and see the sunlight dancing on the water, you might imagine the Rainbow Serpent still gliding beneath the surface, looking after the Wagoorjup place.

The Canning Bridge area is evolving, with one of the exciting changes being the addition of new murals that bring the community to the area. Murals are an art form that is ephemeral, which makes them even more special while they're here.

This booklet has been created to help you explore and appreciate the murals bringing a unique vibrancy to the Canning Bridge area. Each has been made possible through initiatives like the City of Melville's Canning Bridge Place Grants, the Percent for Art program, the Canning Bridge Mural Project and private arrangement.

Public art plays an important role in our City, helping to build a sense of place through interpreting and expressing the area's natural, physical, cultural, and social values. It adds visual character that can be enjoyed by both residents and visitors alike.

Projects such as the Canning Bridge Mural Project also create new professional and economic opportunities for established and emerging Western Australian artists.

As you visit the area, make sure you take the time to discover the murals, learn about the amazing artists, and enjoy all that is on offer from local businesses. For those with children, there's also the Canning Bridge Children's Activity booklet, which is full of fun activities, such as a map that takes you on a tour of the murals, plus a scavenger hunt where you can go on a search for local icons!

Liam Dee is a Perth-based multidisciplinary artist. He is passionate about using public art as a platform to voice the local community and create a unique, lively atmosphere in the spaces where we live.

With a Bachelor of Graphic Design and Illustration from Curtin University, his art creates a mix of realism with a blend of psychedelic form, texture and colour to create a sense of organic life constructed from the inorganic.

Liam's artwork explores the relationships between nature and the man made, the effects of human intervention, and the symmetries between urban life and the natural world.

David Ledger is a Perth-based artist whose work utilises traditional media and techniques. The idea of place, where both material and metaphysical planes closely link and reflect one another, is a common thread throughout his work.

David's mural is deeply connected to its surroundings by the Swan River - a place rich in history, culture, and natural beauty. The Great Egret is one of the key inspirations for this work and its presence symbolises the harmony between wildlife and the landscape, adding to the river's unique character.

Just like the creative process itself, this mural is all about connection – between people, nature, and the spirit of the place. The Swan River, with its deep roots in Perth's history, is at the heart of this mural, bringing the story of this landscape to life.
